

Forbes is the world's leading business media brand, reaching more than 6.7 million influential readers via publications in ten languages in more than 100 countries.

Forbes delivers more affluent, C-Level Executive readers that entertain, participate in sports/leisure/cultural activities, are members of private clubs, involved in various public activities, and have purchased or plan to purchase big-ticket items than the affluent, C-Level Executive readers of Fortune, Business Week, or The Economist.

Forbes magazine is a leading publication in reporting on the world of business and finance, offering authoritative opinions and reliable facts about top corporations, successful CEOs, lucrative ventures, scandalous lawsuits, and much more. Every issue covers a wide variety of topics, including technology, marketing, communications, management performance, investments, law, high-powered individuals, and up-and-coming heavy hitters. Forbes' team of editors and writers are well-known for their savvy investigations, on-point predictions, and quality reporting. This publication is likely most well known for the many lists featured in the magazine, exploiting various subject matters and usually based on levels of wealth and power, offering topics such as "The World's Most Powerful People," "Global High Performers," and "The World's Billionaires." Forbes focuses on entertainment and information for the business world's top, and advice and insight for those aspiring to get there.

Forbes Reaches More C-Level Executives than Fortune, Business Week, or The Economist.
